

Summer GARDENING

Perennials - To Plant In Your Garden

Roses

Roses bloom well in most Canadian climates, but specific varieties thrive better in certain locations.

Peonies

Plant these delicate blooms in full sun at the correct depth. With proper care, peonies should flower for decades.

Iris

Divide and plant irises between late July and late August to ready them for the following year. These flowers bloom in spring and last through early summer.

Hydrangeas

These bulbous beauties come in many different colors—pink, purple, blue and chartreuse, to name a few. Come fall, chartreuse hydrangeas will begin to fade to white. To preserve their color through the winter, cut off any lingering blooms in the fall and bring them inside to dry.

Lilies:

Lilies bloom in summer. Morning sunshine works wonders for these stunning flowers! Lilies thrive when they receive 6-8 hours of sunlight daily, preferably during the cooler morning hours.

How to care for lilies after they bloom – from deadheading to bulb storage

- Use clean, sharp pruners to snip off only the spent blooms. but leave the stem at least 10 inches of the stem intact.. Avoid letting the plant go to seed.
- Keep the soil evenly moist but never soggy.

Summer GARDENING

Annual - To Plant In Your Garden

Dahlias are late-season flowers that bloom from midsummer through the first frost, offering a vast variety of colors, patterns, sizes, and flower forms.

Dahlia Care

- Plant dahlia tubers outdoors in the early spring, after the last frost and once the soil has warmed.
- Choose a planting location that receives full sunlight. After the tubers have sprouted, water regularly.

The ideal time to plant dahlia bulbs is in the spring, after the danger of frost has passed and the soil has warmed up. In most regions, this would be around late April to early May.

Gladiolus

Gladiolus—tall, dramatic, and bursting with color—is the showstopper of any summer garden. These bold bloomers add height and flair to beds and bouquets alike. During May gladiolus "bulb" needs to be planted outside and but when autumn creeps in, it's time to lift those bulbs inside.

Annual & Perennials

Geraniums are attractive container and bedding plants that add color and fragrance to the garden all season long. In Summertime, it can be planted outside and in winter in can be placed in indoor.
